SUBJECT : Allied war supplies as abandoned property

TO : RLOn (THRU: RLS), Regions I, II, III, IV, V, VI, VII, VIII, IX & Z;
FLO (THRU: FLS), Foggia Province.

Adjutant
Asst. Sec.	JP
Asst. Sec.
Chief Clerk

1. The question has recently arisen whether Allied war supplies lying about the countryside are abandoned property which a civilian may legally take for his own use.

2. Property is not abandoned unless the owner intends to relinquish title thereto and so far as Allied war supplies are concerned, the owner is the War Department. A unit or formation may move and either intentionally or accidentally leave certain articles behind. These articles are not abandoned. They may still be salvaged, and they remain the property of the War Department until an official decision to abandon them has been made on behalf of the War Department by the appropriate salvage or other authority.

3. It follows that it is no defense to a charge of wrongful possession for the accused to say that he thought goods were abandoned. To substantiate his defense he must show an official act of abandonment by the appropriate authority. If he cannot show this he must be convicted and the property restored to the War Department. The general circumstances will, of course, be taken into account in fixing the appropriate punishment.

4. The position is different in relation to enemy war supplies. An occupying force does not automatically acquire title to enemy war supplies in the occupied territory. It only acquires the right to take possession of any public movable property of which it can directly or indirectly make use for military operations. It follows that war supplies left behind by the enemy become the property of the Allied Forces when, but only when, some act is done by the Allied Forces to reduce them into possession. In areas where the new proclamations are posted the interests of the Allies are protected by Procl. I, Art V, para 28.

5. Sufficient copies of this instruction are enclosed for distribution to all legal officers in your region. They should bring the contents to the notice of other officers sitting on courts within their respective provinces.

Colonel, G.S.C.,
Acting Chief Legal Officer.

1. The War Department is seriously concerned over the wastage of supplies resulting from lack of supply discipline present among our troops, and is initiating remedial action within the continental United States to bring home to all troops in training the importance of this subject. Troops subsequently arriving in your areas should, as a result, show improved supply discipline and "supply consciousness".
