Letter from Italian to the Allied Control Commission:Pontecagnano (Salerno)
20 May 1944

The undersigned has the honor to report the following:

Italy has lived for centuries on cordial and friendly terms with Great Britain. Italy has given birth to the two immortal discoverers of America: Cristopher Columbus and Amerigo Vespucci, and to Flavio Gioia, born in Salerno, who invented the naval compass.

Italy was driven to war not against Great Britain, but against wicked France, which holds territories that God destined to Italy. Who can ever forget Daladier's famous dagger with which he promised he would have stabbed Italy if she asked to get back her sacred territory, as he stated in his speech on Italian Corsica.

Our great King, in order to avoid useless bloodshed, abolished the Fascist regime which brought Italy into this war and he had Italy capitulate in order to make victory easier--victory that God intended for you.

We have, therefore, become brothers and allies against the Germans, who were once our friends, but who really were the greatest enemies of the Italian fatherland.

I am the exponent of the great majority of the Italian people, who would want that in the coming peace treaty it should be stated that the Eternal and Sacred City of Rome should not be considered any more as Italy's capital, but as a city belonging to the whole world. The Creator of the Universe has wanted Rome to be the seat of Christ's Vicar and the Center of Christianity: He has not wanted Rome to be the seat of a Fascist government which levied Nero's and not Censer's taxes.

Rome was not intended to be the seat of that elective and legislative chamber, where the honorable doctors in political science, elective members of Parliament, transformed her into a seat of pigs acting in an obscene performance.

We want a Christian, Democratic Monarchy. God made Italy the mother of Kings and Emperors, for who has been used to live in the splendor of the Savoy Family.

King Victor Emmanuel II freed the sacred Italian soil from the German invader and founded the Italian State with the help of Garibaldi. Victor Emmanuel III proclaimed at Peschiera that our present enemy had to be expelled and he won him at Vittorio Veneto.

In the war of 1916-18, when we were Allies, we achieved a great victory, which displeased the Communists and at that time officers were compelled to dress in civilian dress in order not to be insulted. People who had been wounded in the war were beaten and outraged. All the life of the Country was passing through a period of anarchy. Deserters like Misiano were honored. The country was going to ruin, until the Fascist stick put things in order again. If these things had not happened, Fascism would never have been born. In this case the foolish foreign policy followed by Italy would not have been followed and our Country would not have passed through such great disasters.

In my letter of 27 December to the Minister I drew attention to the contrast between the expectations originally entertained and the hard realities now facing the Italian Government and people in South Italy.

An article has since appeared in the hard Communist newspaper, "Civiltà Proletaria", which illustrates the point clearly. I enclose a translation. There are two main grounds: the attributed success of our propaganda and the fact that for good reasons we have emphasized different things in our news and foreign services. In the case of Italy we have not little difficulty on the how also interpreting concepts mixed with a degree of hatred. On the Italian, Allied declarations such as the Atlantic Charter and the Four Freedoms have had more prominence and the inference certainly has been that we stood not only for liberalism in politics but liberalism in supply. The results of the first contact between us and Italians has therefore been one of mutual surprise. We have a frame of mind not perhaps wholly altered to expressions of good will to all men such as the Atlantic Charter and the Four Freedoms. The Italians expected not a conquering army who had for four years been through blood and sweat and tears, but a race of knights errant. No wonder therefore that the last months have been a somewhat confusing experience in South Italy on both sides.

We shall get over this here without too many broken heads. But I think that it may be worth pointing the moral; for as this I imagine that Italy will not be the exception but the rule. I confess I see no solution. But perhaps Bruce Lockhart and his assistants will be able to think of ways of tiding over a little less abruptly the difference between our home and foreign propaganda. Otherwise other Europeans may be as surprised at the twentieth century Englishmen as the Italians have been. And vice versa.

We and the Allies

The Allied armies were everywhere enthusiastically received; the liberating armies have had concrete aid from the arrested masses.

Perhaps this was due, rather than to the promises made, to the fact that the Italians looked to the Allied nations as the restorers of their old democratic liberty. They looked for restoration of order (in the democratic, not fascist sense), and an alleviation of their suffering from famine. Above all they expected from the Allies the decisive liquidation of fascism and the creation of a really healthy social and political climate in Italy.

Now it can be observed that many Italian promises made were not fulfilled, many hopes aroused have been so far in vain.

We communists have not forgotten the heavy responsibilities of our people nor have we forgotten the sufferings of other people who are much less responsible for us, the Germans, Poles and French. As we are especially sensitive to the argument that "the war has to be fought," we must do very well indeed as usual, do everything to help the Allies in any way we can, in any way that might assist them.

We must understand very well why the need for fighting the war obliges one to forget the war also waged by the Allied nations. We understand even less how their need of winning the war can justify the absence of measures that would help to win it; e.g. purge of administration, army and police and so on. We understand at all how this necessity can justify the fact that certain Allied authorities continue to be animated by a spirit hostile to the Atlantic Charter and the Moscow Conference.

We know that the Allies owe us nothing and we ask for no special privilege. But as true antifascists, as long as we have fought fascism for years, it is our clear duty to tell the Allies, to whom we wish to give our sincerest collaboration, political and military, that war against fascism needs a consistent policy which should have the following concrete manifestations, both urgent and feasible:

- a vigorous purge
- aid in the creation of an army which can fight on equal terms with a well armed foe
- reasonable plans for supply and provisioning, and hence a struggle against the black market and bringing wages and pay in line with increased living costs.
