THE KING'S PROCLAMATION AND THE GOVERNMENT'S ANSWER.

The King's preclamation.

1430 Spe Newfole

On assuming the Lucgetenenza Generale del Regne before, and the power of the Crown after, I declared that I would submit myself to the vote of the people, freely expressed, on the institutional form of the State.

I made the same affirmation after June 2, certain that all would have waited for the decisions of the Corte Subrema di Cassazione, to whom the law had entrusted the control and the proclamation of the definite referendum results. In face of the proclamation of the definite referendum results. In face of the proclamation and partial communication made by the Supreme Court, in face of the reserve to announce before 18th June the judgement on the claims and to make known the numbers of veters and votes non valid, in face of the question raised and not resolved to calculate the majority, I, myself, once again yesterday, repeated that it was my right and duty as King that the Corte di Cassazione made known if the republican institutional form had reached the needed majority.

Suddenly, in the night, in open contempt to the law and to the indipendent and severeign power of the magistracy, the Government has committed a revolutionary deed, assuming by arbitrary and one-sided action that what did not pertain to them and placed me in the alternative to provoke a bleedshed or submit myself to violence.

ITALIANS!

While the Country is but free of a tragic war, its frontiers threatened and its very unity in danger, I believe it is my duty to do what is yet in my power to prevent other sorrows and tears to the people who has so much suffered.

I trust that the Magistracy, whose indipendent traditions of liberty are one of the Italian gleries, may voice its say freely; but, not wanting to oppose by force the abuse of power, nor render but, not wanting to oppose by force the abuse of power, nor render but, not wanting to oppose by force the abuse of power, nor render but, not wanting to oppose by force the abuse of power, nor render but, not wanting to oppose by force the abuse of power, nor render but, not wanting to oppose by force the abuse of power, nor render but, not wanting to oppose by force the abuse of power, nor render but, not wanting to oppose by force the abuse of power, nor render but, not wanting to oppose by force the abuse of power, nor render but, not wanting to oppose by force the abuse of power, nor render but, not wanting to oppose by force the abuse of power, nor render but, not wanting to oppose by force the abuse of power, nor render but, not wanting to oppose by force the abuse of power, nor render but, not wanting to oppose by force the abuse of power, nor render but, not wanting to oppose by force the abuse of power, nor render but, not oppose by force the abuse of power, nor render but, not oppose by force the abuse of power, nor render but, not oppose by force the abuse of power, nor render but, not oppose by force the abuse of power, nor render but, not oppose by force the abuse of power, nor render but, not oppose by force the abuse of power, nor render but, not oppose by force the abuse of power, nor render but, not oppose by force the abuse of power, nor render but, not oppose by force the abuse of power, nor render but, not oppose by force the abuse of power, nor render but, not oppose by force the abuse of power, nor render but, not oppose by force the abuse of power, nor render but, not oppose by force the abuse of power but, not oppose by force the abuse of power by force the a

Declassified E.O. 12356 Section 3.3/NND No. 7850/6 In making this supreme sacrifice for the welfare of the Country, it is my duty as an Italian and as King, to voice my pretest against the vislence perpetrated : a protest in the name of the prople and the Grown, of the Italians at heme and abread, who have a right to see its fate decided according to the law, and in such a way that all doubts and suspicions be dissipated.

To all these who are still faithful to Monsrohy, and to all these whose scule rebel to the injustice, I recall to them my example, and exhert them to avoid a more acute tension of dissensions which maght lead to more serious peace treaty terms.

With my heart griefstriken, but with my conscience at peace for having done everything in my power to fulfill my duties, I leave my own country.

Let these who swere to serve the King consider themselves free frem their eath, but free to serve their Country, as they have faithfully served and truste d scross many hard trials in the past.

I turn my thoughts to all these who fell for Italy and to the Italians all. Whatever fate is Italy's let, my Country can always rely on me as its most devoted son.

LONG LIVE ITALY!

THE GOVERNMENT'S REPLY

The King's departure, which tesk place at 3,40 p.m. at CIAMPINO had been carefully kept hidden from the Government. The Ministry of Air was rung up at last mement by organizers of departure not to inform the Presidente del Consiglio, as they would do so themselves.

But the President was duly infermed from other sources. On making certain that goal was LISBONA, he effered no objections.

Shortly after the King's departure, rumers spread that the preclamation in question would be transmitted to the Italians.

The proclamation is a painful document drawn on false basis and artificial arguments. It is false what it defines as plain "open munication" the notes of referendum results issued by the Cassazione on IO June. What it mentions as a sudden statement by the Consiglic del Ministry of the past night, around the constitutional effects of the proclamation, is a falsehood. The facts are all on the contrary. In fact during the night of IO June, the Consiglic while recognizing referendum results in favour of the Republic reserved to decide on concrete measures deriving from them.

After this, and netwithstanding these decisive statements, the King centinued to meet for two consecutive days the President in connection with a regency, and no mention was made to "revolutionary action" or "one-sided arbitrary move".

The Government, netwithstanding the difficulty to agree on the contrary theses, continued with negotiations, until they were suspended by phone message by Avv. LUCAFERO.

Yesterday merning, the King sent the noted letter, in which he ignered the proclamation by the Certe di Cassasione and thus offiged the Government to insist on the constitutional effects of the preclamation.

It is against this second order of the day by the Consiglie. that the reyal preclamation accuses of "revelutionary move" and "arbitrary one-sided powers". In the said order of the day, no mention whatever is made of taking over any authority or making use of it, but the question is only raised as to competency. In fact the Government has remanded the deliberations of concrete measures, announced last Monday.

"No contempt for the law or for the severeign indipendency of the magistracy" nor of obliging the King to chose "the alternative of provoking a bloodshed or be submitted to acts of violence."

He could have ealmly continued his discussions and consultations. The Government, especially the President of the Consiglio, had up to the last mement proved that they only wished for a peaceful solution.
