1. Reference your 3687/1/A-2 dated 21 Oct. 46.
2. MASUR was arrested by Italian civil police in ROME during the night of 28 August 1946.
3. On interrogation he stated he came to ITALY as a member of POLCORPS in 1943. Towards the end of July he was sent to the Polish Camp at GERVINARA to await repatriation. He did not wish to return to POLAND and escaped on or about 21 August, making his way to ROME.
4. MASUR was without documents at the time of his arrest and without visible means of support. He is detained by the Italian authorities as an undesirable alien being found in ITALY without authority. MASUR was during the early part of October 1946 transferred from Regina Coeli Prison, ROME to the Collecting Centre at FOSSOLT di GABRI to await deportation.
5. The Camp at GERVINARA is administered by POLCORPS and used as a centre for members who have elected to return to POLAND to await repatriation.
6. This HQ has no information regarding the status of Polish nationals in GERVINARA. If personnel are discharged from military service before arrival at this Camp then it appears that MASUR is a civilian and the Italian police have acted in the normal course of their duty. On the other hand subject may be a deserter from POLCORPS and wishes to avoid repatriation. Further it is possible that MASUR has already been repatriated to POLAND and returned to ITALY illegally.

A Pole, Wladyslaw NAWROCKI, living and having his family in France had decided to join the Polish Army. He was sent by the Polish Military authorities in France to Marseille from where with a group of other comrades in similar position, he was brought to Rome where he arrived on September 1st. The group was sent to the Polish Transit Military Camp.

Having some trouble with the intestine, he applied to the Polish Red Cross and received a letter of introduction to the British Hospital.

On Saturday, September 8th at about 4 p.m. being on the Piazza Venezia (by him described: 'near a huge white monument with enormous horses') he was approached by two civilians in a car (seeming to be a taxi) who offered themselves to help him and convey to the hospital.

Instead, they arrived to the villa of the representative of the Provisionary Government of Warsaw and there the Pole has been interviewed and affirms that he has been induced to return to Poland. Having replied that he had no family there (all his family is in France) and that he is not a communist but a Pole, he received a kick in the back. Still refusing to agree with his interlocutors he had his Polish Eagle torn out from his cap, threatened of death if joining the Polish Army and with a last kick turned out of doors. A passing-by American military car took him at his request to the British Hospital.

Upon the whole it results that there was a kind of kidnapping, threats with blows and incitements against the Polish Army.

La notte del 28 agosto c.a. veniva fermato il suddito polacco di cui all'oggetto, nell'interno della villa Pagenini.

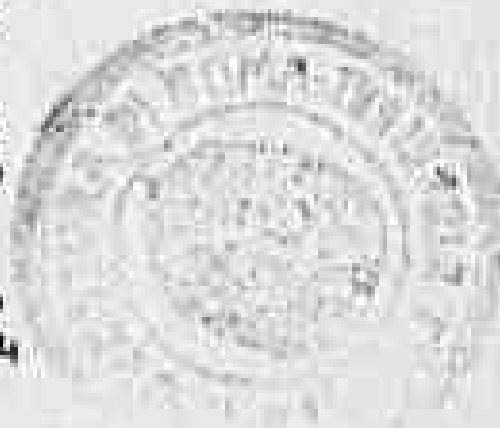

Il predetto, qui interrogato, ha affermato di essere venuto in Italia nel 1943 come militare del Corpo di spedizione polacco e di essere stato circa un mese fa avviato al campo polacco di Cervinara in attesa di rimpatrio.

Il Masur non desiderando fare ritorno in Polonia, ha dichiarato di essere fuggito circa dieci giorni orsono da detto campo, dirigendosi a Roma.

Trastrandosi di elemento straniero, sprovvisto di documenti e di mezzi di sussistenza, questo ufficio, salvo contrario superiore avviso, propone che lo stesso venga avviato al campo raccolta di Fossoli di Carpi.

Si informa cotesto Ministero che il predetto è stato avviato al carcere in attesa delle superiori determinazioni.

A Pole, Wladyslaw NAWROCKI, living and having his family in France had decided to join the Polish Army. He was sent by the Polish Military authorities in France to Marseille from where with a group of other comrades in similar position, he was brought to Rome where he arrived on September 1st. The group was sent to the Polish Transit Military Camp.

Having some trouble with the intestine, he applied to the Polish Red Cross and received a letter of introduction to the British Hospital.

On Saturday, September 8th at about 4 p.m. being on the Piazza Venezia (by him described: 'near a huge white monument with enormous horses') he was approached by two civilians in a car (seeming to be a taxi) who offered themselves to help him and convey to the hospital.

Instead, they arrived to the villa of the representative of the Provisionary Government of Warsaw and there the Pole has been interviewed and affirms that he has been induced to return to Poland. Having replied that he had no family there (all his family is in France) and that he is not a communist but a Pole, he received a kick in the back. Still refusing to agree with his interlocutors he had his Polish Eagle torn out from his cap, threatened of death if joining the Polish Army and with a last kick turned out of doors. A passing-by American military car took him at his request to the British Hospital.

Upon the whole it results that there was a kind of kidnapping, threat with blows and incitements against the Polish Army.
