(Capt. Enthoven).

1. In compliance with your request (communicated by D.O. to the undersigned of 18 May 45), six copies of the Brief Memorandum on Italian Archives are forwarded herewith.

2. It is supposed that these copies are required in addition to the 9 copies passed to Capt. Enthoven on 20 Aug 44 (seven of which were ear-marked for Provincial Commissioners). Any unwanted copies, would, with profit, be returned to this HQ., where stocks of the pages making up the Brief Memorandum are very low.

BRIEF MEMORANDUM

with Appendices and Lists

on the PROTECTION of

ITALIAN ARCHIVES

1 5 3 8

Declassified E.O. 12356 Section 3.3/NSM No. 785016

THE PROTECTION OF ITALIAN ARCHIVES

The word 'archives' is here used to signify accumulations of Documents (Charters, Letters, Registers, Accounts, Minutes) which have come together by a natural process in the course of business of all kinds, public or private, lay or ecclesiastical, in all periods. They are not necessarily old or beautiful, though they often may be: in Italy, for instance, in which country, as in England, they have been preserved in great profusion, it is not unusual for the archives of a Town or a Cathedral Chapter or of a Family, to date from the 12th Century or earlier* and collections dating from some centuries back are common.

Whether they date from such early periods or from the present day, archives are all alike in certain respects. All are in some sense unique and therefore irreplaceable; all are closely related to one another and to the life of the community which produced them; and they contain as a whole an incalculable quantity of unexplored knowledge. This mass of information is not only important for historical purposes, but often (in the case of the Modern ones) essential for the conduct of the war or the reconstitution of Civil life. For these reasons it has been judged proper to make a special effort for the protection of all archives, so far as the exigencies of War permit: and the present Memorandum and appendices have been compiled to that end for the information of Officers concerned.

As an indication of the nature of the problem - - the list (appendix II) annexed to the present Memorandum, though it makes no attempt at completeness, names something like 1500 repositories in Italy: many of them perhaps not large but all having a certain importance.

Owing to their nature archives are in many ways more liable to damage than monuments and works of art. For example, the paper and parchment of which they are composed may easily be ruined by water or even the humidity resulting from broken windows. Again, since they consist of related papers, the destruction or even the displacement of a few may destroy the significance of all the remainder. Apart from actual destruction or injury by snell or bomb, the principal dangers are three--all unhappily exemplified by a number of unfortunate examples which have oc-as a whole an incalculable quantity of unexploited knowledge in the form of information is not only important for historical purposes, but often (in the case of the Modern ones) essential for the conduct of the war or the reconstitution of Civil Life. For these reasons it has been judged proper to make a special effort for the protection of all Archives, so far as the exigencies of war permit: and the present Memorandum and appendices have been compiled to that end for the information of Officers concerned.

As an indication of the nature of the problem -- the list (appendix II) annexed to the present Memorandum, though it makes no attempt at completeness, names something like 1500 repositories in Italy: many of them perhaps not large but all having a certain importance.

Owing to their nature Archives are in many ways more liable to damage than Monuments and Works of art. For example, the paper and parchment of which they are composed may easily be ruined by water or even the humidity resulting from broken windows. Again, since they consist of related papers, the destruction or even the displacement of a few may destroy the significance of all the remainder. Apart from actual destruction or injury by shell or bomb, the principal dangers are three--all unhappily exemplified by a number of unfortunate examples which have occurred within recent months:

(1) Neglect after buildings have been damaged so that documents are allowed to become and remain wet, or to be damaged in other ways.

(2) Destruction or Dispersal by Occupying troops. Sometimes this has been caused by souvenir-hunting mischief: but generally it results from mere ignorance of the possible value of papers which perhaps look neither old nor interesting and are accordingly thrown out of window or used to light the stove.

(3) Looting or Destruction by the civilian population: the former for the sake of the paper or for sale as curios, the latter because of a vague idea that they may contain information damaging to the looters.

Not infrequently also ancient Manuscripts ('Codices', etc.) not strictly of an archive character, have been combined with them; especially in the Archives of Cathedral Chapters and in cases where the more ancient archives of a Town have been taken out and combined with other documents under the title of 'Archivi Storici' in the Communal Library or Museum.

A part from their value it is an important point of Policy that Protection of archives by the Allies should be a recognized thing. German propaganda has recently made much of the alleged arrival in America of souvenirs looted from the Sicilian Repositories.

Protective Measures should be comparatively easy once the existence and position of the archives is known. It is hoped that the present Memorandum and List, though imperfect, may supply that necessary information.

(1) The Repairs necessary for Buildings should be an obvious matter, though experience in a number of cases suggests that without external stimulus the Italian authorities may fail to take needed action. Where Documents themselves have been damaged the notes supplied (in an Italian translation) in appendix IV may prove useful: they have been extensively circulated in England.

(2) Against possible damage by Troops the orders published in Administrative Instruction No. 10 should be generally a sufficient protection. The more important archives are specified and starred in the List accompanying that instruction: which also contains (para. 11) an order that all collections of papers, wherever found, shall be protected from casual destruction and dispersal.

If the occupation of an archives building by troops cannot be avoided, the space actually containing archives should, as provided by the instruction, be shut off so that casual interference is impossible. The official custodian, if he can be found, should be allowed reasonable access: and if the documents have to be moved he should superintend the operation.

(3) Against Looting by Civilians the best protection is probably to be found in application of the provisions of article 351 of the Italian Penal Code. This lays down severe penalties for the destruction or removal of Public Records; a phrase which covers in Italy a large number of modern classes (See Appendix III).

The Monuments and Fine Arts Sub-Commission of the Allied Control Commission now includes trained archivists. It is these Officers' function to help and advise in all cases of difficulty and to encourage and enable Italian archivists to carry out necessary measures.

The normal administration of Italian archives falls into two divisions, according as they are Lay or Ecclesiastical. Lay archives, whether in Public, Semi-Public, or Private ownership, come to some extent under the control of a system of State archivists, consisting of the Directors and Staff of 42 Repositories of 'State' or 'Provincial' archives ('archivi di Stato' or 'archivi Provinciali di Stato')*. Of these Directors, nine act also as 'Superintendenti' of larger divisions. Though the direct powers

*This service 'dependa' from the Ministry of the Interior, which has also the advice of two Inspectors.

The seats of the Superintendencies are at Rome, Bologna, Florence, Genoa, Milan, Naples, Palermo, Turin, and Venice.

Ecclesiastical Archives are, since the 'Concordat,' entirely independent of the State; and it is understood that the Vatican, though issuing general recommendations, leaves actual arrangements largely in the hands of the local authorities -- i.e. of the archbishops and Bishops and of the Cathedral Chapters and other independent bodies. Efforts are being made to secure the cooperation of these also in the production of a survey of Church Archives similar to that of Lay Archives mentioned above.

The present Compilation gives in Appendix I a summary Classification of all Italian Archives; in Appendix II a List of all the more important ancient archives both Lay and Ecclesiastical, arranged in alphabetical order of places, for each of the 12 Regions ('compartimenti') of Italy; and

In Appendix III a Description of the most prominent classes of Modern Public Archives; with an indication of where they are to be found.

As a brief indication of what will generally or frequently be found it may be convenient to say that every Commune of any size should have an organized Archivio Comunale of current administrative documents and that, if it is a place of any antiquity, this may contain also ancient Charters, Registers, etc., both of the Town and of local Families, and Institutions, of some note: that every Parish Church ('Parrocchia') should have registers which may go back to the 16th Century: that a larger Town will generally be the seat of a District Archivio Notarile (Notarial Records - a most important legal class); and, if it is the seat of a Diocese, the archbishop or Bishop and Chapter will preserve there (separately) an Archivio Vescovile and Archivio Capitolare: that Towns of the same grade will normally be the seat of one or more of the more important Law Courts (Tribunali, Corte d'Appello, Corte d'assise) and of the District Offices of Taxation, Land Registration and so forth (Catasto, Registro, etc.) which may have compilations of considerable immediate value: and finally, that every Provincial Capital (whether or not it possesses an Archivio di Stato will have archivi Provinciali covering all administrative and governmental activities of the Province over a considerable period.

APPENDIX ITHE PRINCIPAL DIVISIONS OFITALIAN ARCHIVESLAY ARCHIVES.

- (1) Those of the Central Ministries which carry on the affairs of the Realm. These, so far as they have been brought together, are preserved in the Archivio del Regno at Rome; but modern or current documents are of course retained still by each Ministry and its (often very numerous) sections and two or three have as yet deposited little if anything in the Central Repository.
- (2) Those of the Independent Kingdoms, Duchies, Republics, etc., which were formerly sovereign powers in various parts of Italy. These are in each case in a local State Repository--Archivio di Stato. They include the modern archives of the Province in which they are situated and usually also large archive series of Family, Monastic and other archives of the locality.
- (3) Those of important Provinces other than the above. These are in a similar State Repository--Archivio Provinciale di Stato--under a State archivist. Their own deposits date only from the 18th of 19th Century but they also have sometimes older deposits.
- (4) Those of other local authorities, i.e. the remaining Provinces (those which have not yet a State Archives Repository), and the Communes. All these keep their archives independently but are under the surveillance of the State Superintendent and have sometimes (in the case of the Communes) deposited their older archives with the Archivio di Stato of the Province in which they are situated. Archives not so deposited should be found at the Prefettura or Municipio, except where a Comune having ancient as well as modern documents has started a special archivio for them, sometimes in combination with a Town Library or Museum.
- (5) Those of Notaries Public. The Notaries in Italy occupy a position midway between that of the Solicitor or Attorney and that of the Officials of a Court of Justice; they have been charged since early times with duties of Legal Registration and their Records, preserved in large quantities, from the 15th Century or even earlier, and with surprising continuity, form a most important body of evidence for the history of

- (5) Those of Notaries Public. The Notaries in Italy occupy a position midway between that of the Solicitor or Attorney and that of the Officials of a Court of Justice: they have been charged since early times with duties of Legal Registration and their Records, preserved in large quantities, from the 15th Century or even earlier, and with surprising continuity, form a most important body of evidence for the history of Law. By a Law of 1937 they are organized, under the Ministry of Justice, in more than 100 archivi Notarili Regionali e Distrettuali. But there is also a number of smaller (communal) accumulations. They should be found in special buildings or possibly still annexed to the Courts. In some instances the older documents have been deposited in the archivio di Stato.
- (6) Those of the Local Branches of larger authorities, e.g. the Lower Courts, the Police, the Land Registries, etc. These modern documents, though not all of permanent value, may be of great immediate importance for current work. They will normally be at the office of the body in question. (See appendix III).
- (7) Those of Local Branches of the Fascist Organization. Same comment as above under (6). These and Police archives are likely to be particularly liable to destruction by the populace, and on the other hand, might be particularly important for immediate needs.
- (8) Those of Semi-Public Institutions, some of great antiquity. They include Educational and Benevolent Institutions, Professional and Trade Organizations, Public Utility Undertakings, Banks, great Mercantile Concerns, Insurance Companies and the like, which though formerly only advantage or satisfaction, are recognized as discharging public functions; such recognition has been particularly wide of recent years in Italy, and in fact many of the documents resulting from modern activities of this kind are considered to be of a public character and their form regulated by law.

The chief Archives will normally be in the headquarters of the Institution, though some of the more ancient may have a special archivio if they have not been deposited in an archivio di Stato.

(9) Those of Private Bodies and Individuals.

Nothing can be said of the placing of the vast proportion of these. But a large number of the best known ancient family Archives, and a certain number of those of institutions, have been deposited in archivi di Stato or in special local repositories created for them.

ECCLESIASTICAL ARCHIVES.

(1) The Vatican Archives.

(2) Those of Archbishops.

These may, for convenience, be grouped with

(3) those of Bishops. They include the important Archives of the Ecclesiastical Courts, the Bishops' Registers, and other (administrative) series, often of early date.

The archivi arcivescovili or vescovi may be preserved in the Cathedral but probably, as a general rule, will be in or near the Palace and in close relation to the Offices of the Court. Occasionally the Legal (Archives of the 'Curia') may be kept separately from other series (Archives of the 'Mense', etc.).

(4) Those of Chapters will often contain very early Charters and Bulls. The archivio Capitolare will probably be kept (quite distinct from the Episcopale) in the Cathedral or some building immediately annexed.

(5) Those of Parishes (archivi parrocchiali). These have not had (as in England) civil functions and consequently not accumulated great quantities of archives. But the keeping of Registers of Baptisms, Marriages, and Burials, has been obligatory since the 16th Century, and these are important. The Archives should normally be kept in the Sacristy.

- (6) Those of other Independent Ecclesiastical Institutions, - Collegiate Bodies, Religious Orders or Houses ~~of Religious~~, Seminaries, etc. The Archives are usually kept on the spot.

Note, however, that owing to the suppression of Religious Houses in about 1860 a very large quantity of Monastic Archives have passed into the archivi di Stato or archivi Provinciali di Stato.

APPENDIX IILIST OF ITALIAN ARCHIVESPRELIMINARY NOTE

This list is incomplete; not only for lack of information in works of reference but also because to insert individually all, or even a large proportion, of the Archives included under certain of the categories distinguished in the preceding note (Appendix I) would be to make it hopelessly cumbersome and to submerge the more important entries. Certain categories have therefore been omitted completely, and in general the policy has been to insert only those accumulations whose existence was definitely established by personal knowledge or reference in books. Since, however, this led to some glaring omissions, particularly in the case of Cathedrals (which must almost certainly have Archives annexed to them in every case) and the more considerable and ancient Towns, entries have been added for these when necessary. These entries are distinguished by not having their Italian title given in brackets. The result, shortly, is as follows, A. del Regno, A. di Stato, A. Provinciali (Nos. 1-3 in app. I).	All in list.

A. Comunali (No. 4).	Principal ones inserted, but some conjecturally.
A. Noterili (No. 5).	Principal ones all inserted; some of smaller probably not.
Archives of Local Courts, Police Offices, Land Registries, etc. (No. 6).	Not inserted.

A. Parrocchiali (No. 5).	Not inserted.
Archives of other Ecclesiastical Bodies (No. 6).	Only known examples inserted.

All entries marked with one or more asterisks are included in the printed List of Monuments issued with A.A.I. Administrative Instruction No. 10.

It remains to add a warning that there has been, both on the Lay side and on the Ecclesiastical, much evacuation of precious things to places of security. At present there is no possibility of making or finding lists of such places; and the possibility of evacuation having taken place must be allowed for in every instance of importance.

Finally it must be repeated that the present is only a First Draft, made under difficulties. Reports recording modifications or additions may be addressed to the Monuments, Fine Arts and Archives Sub-Commission, Allied Control Commission, and will be most welcome.

Summary of the Principal Classes of

PLACES WHERE THEY SHOULD BE FOUND

Description of Archives.

'17) Central ('A. Del Rejno').

Archives of the various Ministries and Public Offices and of their Dependent Sections (see entries under ROMA in Appendix I.).

(2) Provincial (11A. Provinciale').

The working papers of Modern Provincial Government since the 19th Century. (See individual entries under Provincial Capitals in Appendix I.).

(3) Town ('a. Comuna'le').

The working papers of Modern Municipal Government. There are over 7000 'Comuni' in Italy; of which perhaps 1000, corresponding with the sub-divisions (Municipalities) of the Provinces, might be considered to be of some importance. (See entries under the more important Towns in Appendix I.).

(Magistralo delle Imprese!).

Commercial Register (recently created Registry of Commercial and Industrial Enterprises. Archives at present in Offices of Tribunals.

(5) Legal Records

(a) of Supreme Court ('Corte di Cassazione').
One Court.

(b) of Courts of Appeal ('Corti d'Appello').
18 Courts, one at headquarters of each Region ('Compartimento').

Place of Deposit

Archivio del Regno at Rome, or Ministry, etc.,
concerned.

APPENDIX IV.

FIRST AID FOR DAMAGED MANUSCRIPTS.

(Adapted from Memorandum No. 6 issued by the British Records ~~manuscripts~~)

THE NECESSITY FOR PROMPT ACTION.

The following brief notes deal only with elementary and primary requirements, but it cannot be too widely known that in a very large proportion of cases invaluable first-aid measures, with no equipment that cannot be easily improvised, can be taken by anyone who is prepared to master a few simple principles and do a certain amount of patient work.

..... the subject divides itself naturally according as the documents are on Vellum or Parchment, or on paper and according as the damage results from Fire or Water; the second of these is the worst, because its effects continue and grow progressively more mischievous. In a number of instances it has been found possible to do a considerable amount of restoration in the case of documents, especially paper ones, which have been soaking wet, or even immersed, for a period of weeks: but it is taking a big risk to postpone preliminary measures for more than a day or two It is particularly important that documents which are folded or pressed close to others, should not be left in this form in a sodden condition: they must be opened out and dried.

(In Italian archives of certain classes Vellum and Parchment figure largely as bindings: sometimes older documents of considerable value have been used for this purpose.)

DOCUMENTS ON PAPER.

When paper documents have been touched to any serious extent by Flame, or by any other means become actually carbonised or charred, their treatment is a matter for an expert. They should, if possible, be protected by being enclosed in boxes, with a loose wrapping of tissue paper.

When they have been merely subjected to intense heat, they will probably ^{be} brittle and should not be handled more than can be helped until they have had time to re-absorb from the atmosphere a normal amount of moisture. If after some time they still seem brittle they may require re-sizing and this again will be matter for an expert.

A special caution in regard to Safes may here be interpolated. Where an iron (and more or less air-proof) safe has been in the midst of a conflagration, there is often a chance that a large proportion of the documents contained in it, especially paper ones, though excessively hot, may be comparatively undamaged; but there is also a strong chance that any influx of fresh air

DOCUMENTS ON PAPER.

When paper documents have been touched to any serious extent by flame, or by any other means become actually carbonised or charred, their treatment is a matter for an expert. They should, if possible, be protected by being enclosed in boxes, with a loose wrapping of tissue paper.

When they have been merely subjected to intense heat, they will probably be brittle and should not be handled more than can be helped until they have had time to re-absorb from the atmosphere a normal amount of moisture. If after some time they still seem brittle they may require re-sizing and this again will be matter for an expert.

A special caution in regard to Safes may here be interpolated. Where an iron (and more or less air-proof) safe has been in the midst of a conflagration, there is often a chance that a large proportion of the documents contained in it, especially paper ones, though excessively hot, may be comparatively undamaged; but there is also a strong chance that any inrush of fresh air would produce active combustion. Generally, therefore, a safe in such cases should be allowed to cool before it is opened.

When Papers have been damaged by water, they should have their folds or pages carefully separated out while damp by levering very gently with a bone or ivory paper-knife, or folder; the process should consist not only of lifting the flat blade after it has been insinuated between two layers of the paper but also of giving it from time to time a quarter turn: and after this process has been begun a small cylindrical wooden bar, about the thickness of a pencil, which is to be rotated between the fingers, may sometimes replace the folder. The documents when separated should be dried by exposure to the air only, not by artificial heat; the most convenient way is generally to hang them over lines in a large, dry room; but a bound volume can often be sufficiently dealt with by being partially opened and stood in a current of air on its upper or lower edge-not on its fore-edge.

The above remarks are based on experience in dealing with paper of some age and generally of fair quality. The cheaper modern papers, are, of course, much less resistant to destructive forces of any kind: but the same remedies may be attempted in the case of damage; and it will be even more necessary that they should be applied with the least possible delay.

PARCHMENT OR VELLUM DOCUMENTS.

When the damage is due to heat only, the document will probably be much struck and, in the case of a folded document, the folds will appear to be stuck closely together. If it is wrapped in a damp (not wet) cloth long enough to become moist throughout (re-damp the cloth if necessary) it should be possible by levering very gently with a paper knife or folder in the manner already described, to separate the layers and unfold the document; which should then be dried in the same way as that prescribed above for paper (by airing only, not heat) and may also, when drying is nearly complete, be lightly pressed. In most cases the document so treated will be reduced in dimensions but legible and not brittle; if it is brittle it will need re-sizing and that is work for an expert. On no account must any force worth speaking of be used in the levering process - only steady, but very light tension. If the folds stick hard together, they probably need a further damping.

When the damage is due to water a similar process must be put in hand without delay, while the document is still damp. Once more, the drying process must be by air only, not by exposure to heat.

A certain amount of patience is sometimes necessary, though often successful work may be done surprisingly quickly. But in any case, violence should never be used; it will achieve nothing of value.

Le brevi note seguenti riguardano solamente il trattamento elementare ed essenziale: ma è bene si sappia che in molti casi si può dare inizio ad azione di restauro senza avere a disposizione alcun mezzo che neanche si potrebbe facilmente improvvisare, purchè si sia disposti apprendere alcuni principi semplici e fare del lavoro paziente.

..... La materia si suddivide naturalmente a seconda che i documenti siano su cartapeccora o pergamena o su carta..... ed a seconda che il danno sia stato causato da acqua o fuoco. I danni causati dall'azione dell'acqua sono i peggiori perchè gli effetti continuano e diventano progressivamente più deleteri. In molti casi è stato possibile compiere un buon lavoro di restauro su documenti, specialmente quelli di carta, che siano stati inappuntati o persino immersi per alcune settimane: ma rinviare le misure preliminari più di uno o due giorni costituisce un grande rischio.....E' particolarmente importante che documenti che sono piegati o pressati gli uni sugli altri non siano lasciati umidi ed in tale forma: essi devono essere aperti ed asciugati.....

(In alcune specie di archivi italiani la Pergamena risulta largamente usata come legatura. Per tale scopo sono stati usati talvolta anche documenti più antichi di valore considerevole).

DOCUMENTI DI CARTA.

Quando dei documenti di carta vengono intaccati seriamente dal fuoco o per qualsiasi altra causa divengono carbonizzati oppure seriamente bruciati, essi devono essere trattati da un esperto. Se possibile, essi dovrebbero essere protetti mettendoli dentro scatole, avvolti scioltamente in carta soffice.

Nel caso sono stati sottoposti soltanto a calore intenso, saranno probabilmente fragili e non devono essere toccati più del necessario finchè abbiano avuto il tempo di riassorbire dall'atmosfera una quantità di umidità normale. Se ancora dopo qualche tempo sembrano fragili, può essere necessario il loro trattamento con colla o gelatina, opera da essere fatta da un esperto.

Una speciale precauzione da prendersi in relazione a casseforti può essere qui menzionata. Quando una cassaforte di ferro (a chiusura più o meno ermetica) è stata avviluppata dall'incendio vi è spesso la possibilità che una buona parte dei documenti che conteneva, per quanto eccessivamente riscaldati, siano relativamente intatti; ma c'è anche il pericolo che una rapida immissione di aria fresca produca la combustione. In generale perciò, in casi di questo genere si deve lasciare che la cassaforte si raffreddi prima di aprirla.

Quando i documenti sono stati danneggiati dall'azione dell'acqua devono essere spiegati, oppure le pagine devono essere separate con cura quando sono ancora umide, facendo leva molto dolcemente con uno sfogliacarte d'osso od avorio. Il procedimento da seguirsi non consiste soltanto nel sollevare la parte piatta della lava dopo che è stata inserita tra due pagine del documento, ma anche con un movimento di un quarto di giro di tanto in tanto; e dopo che questo processo è stato iniziato, il tagliacarte può essere talvolta sostituito da un piccolo oggetto cilindrico di legno, della dimensioni di una matita, da usarsi facendolo girare tra le dita. Dopo essere stati separati, i documenti devono essere asciugati solamente esponendoli all'aria, non per mezzo di riscaldamento artificiale: di solito il mezzo più conveniente è di stenderli su fili in stanze ampie ed asciutte; un libro legato potrà essere spesso trattato sufficientemente aprendolo parzialmente e tenerlo esposto alla corrente d'aria, sul suo margine superiore o inferiore, non su quello anteriore. Le dette osservazioni sono basate su esperienze fatte con carta un po' vecchia e generalmente di buona qualità. La carta moderna, di qualità inferiore e certamente molto meno resistente alle varie forze distruttrici, ma gli stessi rimedi potranno essere sperimentati in caso di avaria e sarà anche più necessario applicarli senza perdere tempo.

DOCUMENTI IN PERGAMENA

Se l'avaria è dovuta soltanto al caldo, il documento sarà probabilmente contratto e nel caso di un documento piegato, le sue pieghe appariranno essere fortemente appiccicate. Se si tiene avvolto in un panno umido (non bagnato) il tempo necessario per inumidirlo interamente (inumidire di nuovo il panno se necessario) dovrebbe essere possibile separare i fogli e spiegare il documento, facendo leva pian piano con un tagliacarte od un piegatore nel modo già descritto; il documento dovrà essere poi asciugato nello stesso modo prescritto per la carta semplice (ossia arrottarlo semplicemente senza riscaldarlo) e si potrà anche stirarlo leggermente quando è quasi completamente asciutto.

Nella maggior parte dei casi, il documento così trattato sarà ridotto di dimensioni ma sarà leggibile e non fragile; se fosse fragile dovrà essere trattato con colla o gelatina e questo è lavoro di esperto. Non bisogna usare

Non bisogna usare in nessun caso della forza durante il processo di staccamento, soltanto una ferma, ma leggerissima pressione. Se le pieghe sono fortemente attaccate assieme, bisognerà probabilmente inumidirle ancora.

Quando l'avaria è dovuta ad acqua, lo stesso processo deve essere usato senza perdita di tempo, mentre il documento è ancora umido. Ancora una volta si ribadisce che il processo di essiccamento deve essere fatto soltanto con aria, senza asposizione a calore.

Talvolta è necessario un po' di pazienza, qualunque spesso un buon lavoro possa essere fatto con sorprendente rapidità. Comunque, non bisognerà usare mai la violenza che non farà mai niente di buono.
